Inherited style

Say it once on the box, not on every text in it.

Color

color="muted" on the column
Every text in it takes the color, however deep it sits.
Even one in a column inside it.
One sets its own.

The nearest box wins
This one takes ink from the column.
These two take accent.

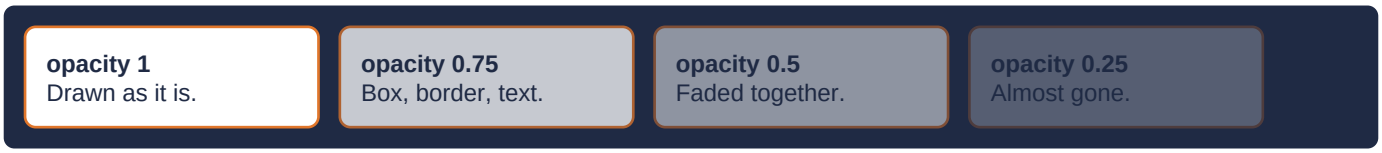
A divider keeps its own color.

Cells, frames, grids

A cell	and another
A frame
A	grid

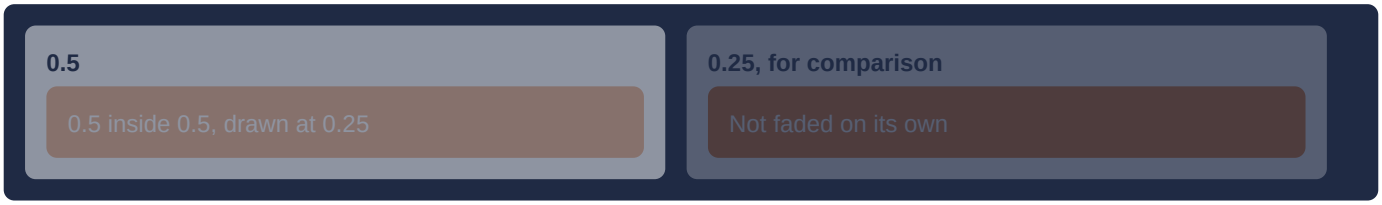
Opacity

The box, its border and everything in it fade as one, over what is behind.



Boxes in boxes

A faded box inside a faded box fades further: 0.5 in 0.5 is 0.25.



This line and the next take the size and color of their layer.
Set on the text itself, the font and the color win.
