Notice: clause 4, page 3

Terms of Service

1. Scope. These terms cover the lamps, the oil and the keepers' rounds. Either party may end them with the notice period set in clause 4, on page 3.[1]

2. Prices. The prices are in Table 3 on page A-1, and they hold for a year.

3. Rounds. The keepers walk the harbor wall at dusk and at dawn, and they write down every lamp they light. The record stays with the harbor master, who reads it at the end of each month and answers for it to the town.

The keepers of the northern coast kept a record of every evening they lit the harbor, and the record grew longer than the harbor itself. Most nights the third column stayed empty, and the keepers took pride in that, since a quiet night meant a safe one. When a storm came in from the east, the record filled a page a night, and the harbor master read it twice.

[1] The period runs from the day the notice arrives, as clause 4 on page 3 says.

Notice: clause 4, page 3

4. Notice. Either party may end these terms with thirty days' notice, in writing. The terms that set the scope, in Clause 1 on page 2, stay in force until the notice runs out.

The prices the notice ends are the ones in the appendix.
